

Celebrate and Move On

Independent Study Mentorship

Weekly Report 30 : April 16- April 20 , 2018

Time to celebrate!! I have finished compiling my research for my final product and can now focus on the formatting and refining of information for the search engine. This is a monumental achievement in my eyes considering I was collecting a myriad of information for this project because I wanted to ensure that each breed could be represented and described in the best way possible; Veterinarians don't have to scavenge for information now with so much being located in one source. Although I feel absolutely relieved and a little completed with my work, I know that I still have a long journey to go before absolute completion.

Looking at what I need to complete next, there is still a semi-lengthy list. I need to refine the information I have with professionals to see if it is credible; I need to format everything in an effectively flowing manner on the website; I also need to finalize the technological aspects of the website to make it easy for access.

The next step I will be focusing on primarily in the coming weeks will be the refining of information. I would like to go over information with my mentor but also reach out to other professionals who would be able to correct or verify my research. Ideally, having the vet community approve my research would ensure that my information is suitable for their professional usage. My goal is to go back to the basics of networking and see who I would like to reach out to and how to do so.
