

Are We Done?

Independent Study Mentorship

Weekly Report 32 : May 14- May 18 , 2018

This week was a challenge. Amidst all of my AP testing, I have also been doing backflips to attempt to finish my Final Product. The biggest frustration I have had with finishing my Final Product is that I felt like I couldn't work independently on the importing of software because I needed my dad to help walk me through the technological aspects of it. I can only blame myself for this however because I chose this challenge and didn't consider the busyness of AP week right in the final days of my product.

I am still ecstatic to be complete with my Final Product! This has been a lot of work and challenged me in many ways. I have had to talk to professionals, work with unfamiliar technology, decipher complex jargon, and much more. It's nice to feel the growth that I have experienced this year and to be proud of what I have accomplished. I also had to give my presentation to the middle schoolers at Pearson. This was very intimidating but also a great learning experience for me because it pushed me outside of my comfort zone.

Going forward I still need to refine my work right before I have to submit it in the upcoming week. I also have to write my product set up and summary. This is doable and will prepare me for Final Presentation Night which is creeping around the corner. My mindset has really shifted from research to refining as I want to make sure I end the year with the best work I can create.
